If the anti-opium fanatics were not blinded by their own determination to.do rank injustice and sacrifice the interests of India for an insane idea, they would recognise that opium smoking and opium eating are two very different things. They proceed on the assumption—contradicted a thousand times-that the Chinese are being poisoned with Indian opium, leading the British public to believe they sat the drug. Worked on by this deception the people at bome subscribe money to keep up an agitation for the abolition of a trade they are taught to regard as scarcely less abominable than the slave traffic. If they could be undeceived the flow of subscriptions would speedily be checked, and the agitation against the opium trade dis out. But public interest is carefully sustained by constant misropresentations of fact and by meetings at which excited and perfervid orators declaim on the iniquity of foreing upon China a drug she leathes. As a sample of the slanders uttered and written by these per sons there is an article in the last issue of the Friend of China in which the writer labours to show that the Indian Government do fheir utmost to render the opium raised in India as poisonous as possible, and says that from the time of WARREN HASTINGS the most highly skilled chemists that could "be found have been employed at high salaries by the Government for the pur-" pose of 'improving' the drug, or, in other "words, of making it stronger and more poisonous." It would be perfeetly useless to point out to them that if India withdrew from the opium trade it would make not a particle of difference to the opium smoking habit in China. The drug would be procured all the same. More land would be placed under poppy cultivation in China, and the Chinese would be compelled to import their rice instead of their opium. Or, what is equally probable, Persia and Turkey would increase their production of the drug, the recent experimental growth in Russian territory would speedily beconverted into a regular crop; and the French in Indo-China would take advantage of the opening, and rame the drug on the

The Minuo tells a strange story of a vonth who appears to have conceived the idea of omu lating the example of Kurushima Tsuncki. An assistant in the dispensary of Dr. Okamura, in Hakozakicho, this lad, by name Yukiba Zenichiro has been for some time in the habit of speaking in an angry discontented manner. A few days ago, he informed a friend that it was his intention to kill Viscount Acki, in connection with the subject of Treaty Revision, and as he appear. ed to be taking measures to obtain money for his parpose and was moreover in possession of a written promise scaled with blood; information was given to the police, with the result that they arrested him on the 1st instant as he passed be fore the Shrine of Suitenge - Japan Mail: For a period of some thirty years, this journal has been subscribed for by the British Legation, and in the course of that period has, we bave reason to know, afforded information of value to successive Ministers accredited here.
